INTRODUCTION

Originally conceived in 1916 as a self-sustaining agricultural and education centre for marginalised Aboriginal people over the next 35 years, the Moore River Native Settlement was to become a place of forced incarceration for many under Section 12 of the 1905 Aborigines Act – and for others, a refuge from the harshness of everyday life.

Within two years of the establishment of the Settlement, children were being removed from their families and placed in dormitories inside a fenced compound where girls were trained as domestic servants, and boys in manual labour and farming.

Their families, along with others who arrived, lived in makeshift camps located outside the perimeter, yet within the reserve area. The adults worked across the Settlement, often performing menial jobs at little or no expense to the government.

By the late 1920s, the Settlement had evolved into a rigid multi-purpose facility combining the functions of a creche, orphanage, relief depot, home for the aged, frail and discharged prisoners, a refuge for unmarried mothers, and those seeking medical assistance from surrounding districts.

Many strongly resisted the move, while a small number were drawn to the Settlement which provided a haven from the inequality of mainstream society.

Throughout the life of the Settlement there were periods of extreme overcrowding and unhealthy sanitary conditions. A recurrent theme in the history of the Settlement was that over the period of its existence, governments of any persuasion were reluctant to spend the necessary money to enable the settlement to function as it was originally intended.

A survey undertaken by magistrate Bateman in 1948 concluded that the outlook of the institution was “absolutely hopeless... the results obtained have been anything but encouraging and... in the conditions which exist at Moore River, there can be no possible chance of success and its continuance without drastic change of policy represents a waste of money and effort”.

Viewed as being counter to the assimilationist policy of the late 1940s, the Settlement was handed over to the Methodist Overseas Mission in 1951 to be run as the Mogumber Training Centre.

DEATH AND BURIAL INFORMATION

In 1921, an area of land (0.6 hectares) was gazetted for a cemetery (reserve no. 17702) approximately 2km south-west of the Settlement. Prior to the proclamation, two children and four adults were buried in a nearby reserve in unmarked graves 2km to the west.

Seven years later, iron crosses were introduced to mark the graves of some one hundred people who were laid to rest, the majority dying from bronchitis and pneumonia. By 1964, when the last burial took place, a further 278 would be interred alongside them.

STATISTICAL DETAILS

Of the 374 deaths that occurred during the lifetime of the Settlement, 54 percent were children under 18 and 73 percent of these were under the age of five, a telling number reflecting the cruel conditions the residents endured.

Of those interred, 191 were females and 180 were males, while three remain unidentified. Six women are known to have died during childbirth and six were born interstate. These figures are based on records that were located during the research, however do not account for all the deaths that occurred at the Settlement. 181 can be linked to families throughout Western Australia, and 40 remain unknown.

MOORE RIVER NATIVE SETTLEMENT,
MOGUMBER.

RECEIVED
13 SEP. 1920

St. 4.
Cemeter,
Have your letter 1322 7th inst. I have chosen a splendid site for a new cemetery, between the present site and the Settlement - across the stony hills in a sou westerly direction from Settlement, about 1 mile by or 1 1/2 mile on a sand hill. But near the river & sufficiently back from the public road, hereunder is a picture from the letter. This is approximately the selected position.

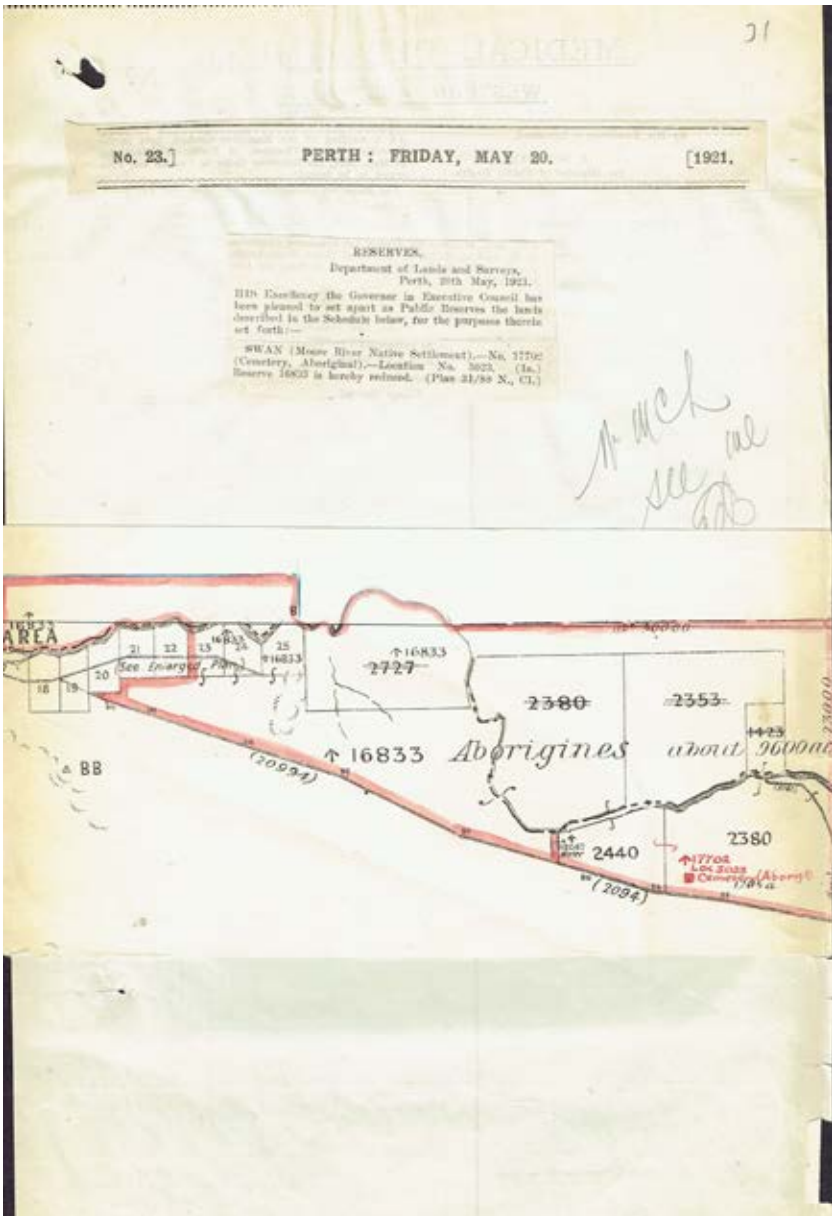

Public road → Mogumber

SEP 18 1920

The subject of the communication may be left for a while I would like a favorable opportunity to get the native concurrence. It will be a simple matter to arrange the subject, then will be considerable difficulty in obtaining their consent. The main thing is a new site in the event of the death. I shall take the letter out to the site on the first opportunity & give you the exact location. This is the only available site then back the river on the reserve & I think it will prove excellent on closer examination.

- Eight married couples, nine single females, one single male and three volunteers operate the training centre.
- The Settlement vested in the Aboriginal Lands Trust (ALT).
- The ALT writes to Methodist Overseas Mission enquiring about the future of the Reserve with the view that it be handed back to the trust 'as soon as practicable'.
- The role of the operation of the MOE at Mogumber as an Aboriginal childcare agency and agricultural and trade training facility were becoming less valid.
- Change in Government policy ends the training program.
- Application submitted to the ALT by the Budjarra Aboriginal Community Association, comprising members drawn from the Mogumber Training Centre, regarding the continued operation of the facility.
- Staffing and managerial problems lead to the closure of the dairy, after many years of supplying milk for the centre. The farm is described as 'generally on its feet' with prospects of a bright future supporting an expanded program.
- The high cost of maintaining the Agricultural School within the complex, combined with a dwindling number of aspirants, lessened the predictability of the future operation. The transfer was in accord with a meeting of the General Conference of the Methodist Church in Melbourne in 1972, advocating the restoration of traditional lands to Aboriginal people 'that Aborigines... be given corporate ownership and control over all reserves... and where possible, traditional lands be restored to the Aboriginal people'.
- The training becoming irrelevant in the age of increased mechanisation and where skills of a more technical nature were required.
- Assistant Director General of Education informs the Board of Missions that the Agricultural School will close.
- 11 students graduate at the Agricultural School in December with Diplomas being presented by the Assistant Director-General of Education. Since the inception of the school in 1964, a total of 68 students had successfully graduated.

1974

- The Mogumber Property and Farm closed, and lease handed over to the ALT. The move is supported by both the State and Commonwealth Governments.

1990

- ALT grants a 99-year lease to the Wheatbelt Aboriginal Corporation.

1998

- Mogumber recognised as a significant heritage site. The Statement of Significance outlines that 'Mogumber Mission (fmr) and Cemetery, [is] a site containing the remains of buildings, structures and camping places relating to the Moore River Native Settlement (1917-1951) and to the Mogumber Methodist Mission (1951-1976), and including a gazetted cemetery, is of cultural heritage significance...' 2018.

Centenary

- 2018 marked the 100th anniversary of the establishment of the Settlement.
- Today, the Settlement represents historic importance in recognising past trauma and the impact that the Stolen Generations had on many Aboriginal people who were removed from their families and placed in state care. The site and its associated memories continue to play an important role in the healing and acknowledgement of the past, providing descendants of the people who are buried there with a social and spiritual connection. The cemetery is one of the largest Aboriginal burial grounds in Australia containing over 400 mainly unmarked graves.
